ACCIDENTAL POISONING RESULTS IN DEATH.

From the Bolivar Bulletin, 11th.

Last Tuesday week a young man named Thompson met his death suddenly and in a rather strange manner. Being in the employ of Mr. Jack Barham, who lives about three miles from Bolivar, he was out in a field plowing. Late in the evening Thompson's plow was stuck in a hole, which he supposed to be a log. He picked up some of the roots and began chewing them, and in the meantime gave a portion to young Barham, who did not like his taste, and thus preserved his life, as the sequel will show. Night coming on, they went to the house, put up the stock, and slept, and Thompson in his sleep, in a few moments he complained of feeling sick, perspiration began to flow freely, and Mrs. Barham, seeing his condition, laid the horn for assistance, but before any of the neighbors arrived, having been with a fit, Thompson died in the greatest agony. He is represented to us as having been a industrious young man, and a real friend to his employer. The cause of his death is quite a mystery, but it is thought that he was poisoned by the roots which he was chewing. Will any one answer?
